

I, MAKE ROBOTS

a psychological thriller

Written by

Rebecca Llopis

Draft
June 2026

FADE IN:

San Francisco. Russian Hill. Sunday, 14th of June 2026.

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — EARLY MORNING

A panoramic view, glass window. Below it: the Golden Gate Bridge, and beside it, Alcatraz sitting stark against the foggy bay.

JACKSON (20s) stands at the window in his boxers. Light brunette hair. Brown eyes that don't move much. He is skinny, stands straight, erect, like a machine. He exhales a long, measured breath. Holds. Releases. Continues staring out at the Bay.

JACKSON

(Still staring out at the view) You good?

GEORGIA (20s) hair dishevelled, creeps in from the bedroom wearing a pink satin nightgown. Sleep still on her. She is warm in every way he is not.

GEORGIA

(Soothing tone) Come back to bed.

He doesn't turn around. He stares out at the prison a moment longer. A slight ray of sun breaks through the fog and moves across his face. He remains stone faced.

CUT TO:

INT. COMPANY BUILDING — OPEN FLOOR — DAY

A cold engineering floor, we are in Jackson's office on the basement floor of a new tech building near Fisherman's Wharf. Twenty people, heads down, working. The air is stale. Half-built robots scattered across the benches — limbs, torsos, exposed wiring, dead eyes.

In the corner, an ENGINEER snaps a wire and physically comes apart. They slide from their desk chair to the floor, shaking, crying — a full psychotic break. People look over their shoulder, but no one moves toward them.

JACKSON exits from his principal office. An office like all others but that stands separated by a glass window. He approaches the worker, crouches down, places a hand on their shoulder, mumbles something inaudible, with a plain face and walks back to his office. He continues adjusting a wire at his desk. We watch across the glass. He remains the calmest object in the room.

The ENGINEER is left in foetal position, writhing on the floor, eyes in the back of their head.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — MIDDAY

GEORGIA, alone. A novel, Isaac Asimov's "I, Robots" open and worn through. She rises and dances to an old French tune "Eve lève-toi" by Julie Pietri— soft, slowly, private, to no one. Four walls hold her like a frame holds a picture or a Bell Jar.

CUT TO:

INT. NIGHTCLUB — THE DARKEST HOURS

Bass through the floor. Strippers, spilled drinks, leftover cocaine, bodies. A man sits beside JACKSON sweating, laughing, gone. JACKSON sits unmoved, sober.

MAN

Let's black out.

The man's words slur into each other. His hand misses JACKSON's shoulder and he falls to the floor. A glass of whiskey, neat, sits untouched on the low table in front of JACKSON.

JACKSON remains stone cold. Watching. Not predatory just observing. A stranger to the night.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — NIGHT

GEORGIA asleep, curled small in the wide bed. The four walls encompass her form. A clock glows 1:30 AM.

A sound at the door — a handle tried, refused. Locked. GEORGIA wakes. Crosses. Unlocks it.

JACKSON steps in. No greeting. He takes her face in one hand and studies it for a second too long, the way you'd check a part against a drawing. He kisses her hard.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — CONTINUOUS

They make love. He is passionate, precise, present in the body and absent everywhere else. He finishes. He rises without a word and heads to the bathroom. GEORGIA remains like a dead body sprawled on the sheets.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BATHROOM — NIGHT

JACKSON stands under the hot steaming shower. He faces the water, eyes closed, in a deep meditative state, motionless — a machine on standby.

He grabs the soap and begins cleaning himself not missing a spot, head to toe. He rubs the back of his feet one by one.

He steps out. Dries his hands first. Picks up his black caseless iPhone Air. Orders Plan B for delivery, the way another man might reorder toilet paper.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — THE NEXT DAY

GEORGIA swallows the pill with water he sets out for her. She looks at him — soft, endearing, devoted. He goes to sit at the edge of the bed and orders a Waymo to the office. 6 minutes.

No words pass between them. GEORGIA creeps towards him and gives him a hug from behind. She kisses his neck. He neither leans in nor pulls away. He lets himself simply be held.

CUT TO:

INT. COMPANY BUILDING — JACKSON'S BAY — DAY

Whiteboard dense with equations. JACKSON tweaks a hardware rig, phone wedged to his ear.

JACKSON

(Into phone, flat)

The gait is wrong. Real motion isn't this clean. I'll send you reference points.

A voice answers in Mandarin on speaker. He nods. Beat.

JACKSON (CONT'D)

Soon. I'm finalising the data now.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — AFTERNOON GOLDEN HOUR.

GEORGIA leans from the windowsill observing the street far below. She is people watching, naming strangers' lives in her head, pretending to have dialogues. She looks like the Disney princess tangled. Her hair is loose. She is in the same pink nightgown.

There is a gentle breeze but the air is heavy, it is hot. She closes her eyes and inhales, peacefully, with a dreamy look.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT - BEDROOM - NIGHT

The clock reads 1:00 AM. JACKSON comes home hollowed out. He drops his backpack - logo Pantheon - it is empty except for his laptop. JACKSON drops on the bed fully clothed. GEORGIA ruffles his hair, slow and loving, until his breathing evens. He stares up at the ceiling.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT - LIVING ROOM - DAY

He sits on a desk chair. He watches GEORGIA move across the room like an artist. Intense analytical gaze. A notebook open on his knee. He writes with a pencil.

GEORGIA walks around the room. Picks up an object, drops it, picks it up again in a different way.

JACKSON continues staring, looking surgically. Ruler and measuring tape in hand. He gives her directions; walk, stretch, reach for the ceiling, crouch by the corner of the room. GEORGIA embodies atypical, dog-like positions. He times each one with his watch. He films. He records with his phone at different angles.

JACKSON

(Not unkind, not warm)

Again. Slower this time. Pick up speed.

She does it again. She acts childlike listening to attentively to his orders. He checks the footage and is satisfied. Continues unsmiling.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT - KITCHEN - MORNING 10am

He orders a Waymo. 4 minutes. Last night's Taco Bell sits cold on the counter. GEORGIA reheats it in the Ninja and eats it happily, barefoot, content with the chicken nuggets and stale French fries leftovers. JACKSON watches her.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT - BEDROOM - 11am

GEORGIA sits with her legs up the wall, getting the blood flowing. Buddha Bar "Musica Del Mar" plays. Silent tears stream her face. Then she laughs, then cries uproariously - the full range of a person, alone. She shakes her legs, stands up, and shakes her hair loose, releasing a low guttural "ahhh".

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — LIVING ROOM — NIGHT 10pm

JACKSON at the door exhales. Unlocks the door. Enters. Thumbs already moving on the iPhone Air — Slack messages stacking faster than he can clear them, hundreds deep.

GEORGIA kisses him, caresses him, asks nothing. He keeps typing through it. She reaches for his thighs, firm hand. He catches her hand before it can go any further and heads to the shower. She is left on the bed.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — BEDROOM — MORNING

GEORGIA stands naked in the center of the room. JACKSON measures her — top to bottom, joint to joint — calling numbers to himself.

She holds each pose without question. Motionless. A mannequin.

INSERT — his notebook: a clean outline of her body, ringed with measurements and dense, branching mathematics. A human being dissected into parts, configurations.

He looks at the page. He is pleased.

SLOW DISSOLVE TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT — LIVING ROOM/ WORKSPACE — EVENING

GEORGIA stands coated in a thin metal shell suit, arms slightly raised. A frame descends from above her — surgical, articulated, Star Wars-clean.

It locks around her hips, her spine, the base of her skull. Fine needles seat themselves along the vertebrae. A faceplate swings up toward her jaw.

She finds his eyes. For the first time she looks uneasy.

GEORGIA

Jackson —

The mask closes over her face. She takes a quick breath. We hear it sealed inside the metal.

She struggles — faintly, then hard, then desperate. The frame answers by tightening. It does not suck her in so much as read her — sampling skin, then muscle, then the shape of every motion he ever timed, pulling all of it inward and writing it down into the shell.

The lights along the frame run from amber to a steady, surgical white. Her thrashing slows to a series of clean test-twitches – left arm, right arm, head tilt – as if something is checking the joints one by one.

She drops to the floor. Still.

JACKSON sits in his chair, arms folded. Waiting on the next steps.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT – LIVING ROOM/ WORKSPACE – CONTINUOUS

A twitch. The thing that was GEORGIA rises. Smooth. Counterweighted. Eyes open. Behind them, faint radar light sweeps the dark room, mapping it, mapping him.

Her skin no longer reads as skin. Her voice, when it comes, is even and clean and stripped of her.

GEORGIA UNIT

How can I be of service, Jackson?

Perfectly programmed. Ready for deployment. He looks at her the way he looked at the bridge on the first morning – with the same vacant eyes.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT – ENTRYWAY – DAY

He boxes her. Foam, then a lid, then tape. A shipping label on the side: a freight address in China.

TWO FEDEX COURIERS lift the crate and carry it out. He holds the door. He does not watch it go.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT – LIVING ROOM – NEXT DAY

The Golden Gate again through the glass. JACKSON on the couch, thumbs moving, clearing Slack.

A notification slides down: GEORGIA UNIT – ACTIVE – FACTORY FLOOR. He taps it.

INSERT – HER POV: a feed from behind her eyes. A factory line in China. Identical figures stand beside her, packing, unpacking, scanning products, hands moving in perfect time. No window. No street. No music.

He watches a moment. Closes the feed. Orders a Waymo. 9 minutes.

CUT TO:

INT. JACKSON'S APARTMENT - BEDROOM - A WEEK LATER

CHLOE (20s) lies in his bed. Same pink satin nightgown. Same endearing warmth. Roughly the same stature.

She caresses his hair, soothes him, kisses his temple. He lies flat on his back, arms at his sides, staring up into nothing.

He does not blink. The number-machine is already running behind his eyes.

CUT TO BLACK.

THE END